

It may not come as a shock to many readers that pharmaceutical drugs can also increase toxic overload. The liver is often times so compromised that it is unable to properly metabolize medications, resulting in toxic side effects. If you are unsure, read the side effects listed in an advertisement for any prescription drug. Some treatments, like x-rays, are more obviously damaging than others. Most people are aware of the extremely damaging effects on the body when a patient undergoes highly toxic chemotherapy or radiation therapy. However, any pharmaceutical agent can add to the body's toxic load and potentially compromise health over time. This is part of the reason why 25 percent of all pharmaceutical drugs approved by the FDA are recalled within five years of approval.

How long does zeolite stay in the body? Can zeolite accumulate in the body over time?

Zeolite is eliminated from the body completely and does not accumulate with time. Liquid zeolite has a half-life of five to seven hours, which is the amount of time required for volume consumed to be reduced by half either through absorption or elimination. It takes five half-lives for all of an agent to be processed out of the body; therefore the range of 25-35 hours is given for total excretion of the zeolite serving.

Our Toxic world

Every day, we are unknowingly exposed to harmful toxins in the form of normal, everyday substances. They are invisible to us, but are contained in the food we eat, in household dust, and the products we use. And the problem is getting worse:

“Every year, U.S. industry releases about 24 billion pounds of toxic substances that are believed to cause developmental and neurological problems in children.”— Environmental News Network, 2000

Zeolites can help fight this toxin overload. Zeolites are a group of crystalline, hydrated alkali-aluminum silicates. They occur naturally in sedimentary and volcanic rocks. There are 40 known zeolite minerals. Their crystalline compound has a cage-like cavity which is negatively charged and therefore attracts and captures harmful substances.

In a comprehensive and somewhat alarming study, the Environmental Working Group discovered that the average person does not need to spend years being exposed to environmental pollutants to have adverse health reactions. In fact, they found that toxicity begins in the womb. Unlike previously thought, the placenta apparently does not protect the developing fetus from toxins and pollutants. The study demonstrated an average of 200 industrial chemicals in umbilical cord blood from 10 babies born in 2004 in U.S. hospitals. The umbilical cord blood of these children was found to harbor pesticides, consumer product ingredients, and wastes from burning coal, gasoline, and garbage. The study proceeded to reveal that as we age, the levels of these contaminants only continue to persist.

The good news is that there are natural products that counteract this destructive trend.

Zeolites, for example, are natural volcanic minerals with a unique, cage-like crystalline structure of their honeycomb framework that works at the cellular level, trapping heavy metals and toxins. In addition, because it is one of nature's few negatively charged minerals, a zeolite essentially acts as a magnet by drawing in toxins, capturing them in its cage, and removing them from the body

According to the Environmental Defence Group, more than 4 billion pounds of toxic chemicals are released into the environment each year—72 million pounds of which are known carcinogens. And where are these cancer-causing agents ending up? In the air you breathe, the water you drink and in the food you eat. They are everywhere. According to the 2005 report from the Centers for Disease Control's (CDC) Environmental Health Laboratory, there are currently 148 chemicals—38 of which have never been measured in the U.S. population—currently found in the blood and/or urine of Americans.

Discover how zeolites can make the difference in maintaining your health.

Specific zeolites are formed by the chemical reaction between volcano lava and the salt from the sea. All-natural zeolites have been shown to remove heavy metals, toxins and other compounds from the body; balance the body's pH levels; and support a healthy immune system. They do this through their unique crystalline structure of cavities and “cages” that trap these substances and remove them safely and naturally from your system.
